Beebe Brave

Fighting a disease like tonsil cancer can be overwhelming, but it helps tremendously when your family and friends are there to support you, said Steve Beebe, a Cross of Grace Partner in Mission who was diagnosed with cancer in December.

Steve has been Director of Choirs at New Palestine High School for 11 years. He has served as the choir director at Cross of Grace for about seven years.

At 47 years old, Steve was leading a busy life and was surprised, to say the least, when tests confirmed the cancer. Steve is not a smoker and didn't consider himself to be a high risk.

He first became aware that he might have a health problem last May when he felt a lump in his lymph node. A quick visit to a health clinic provided him with an ear infection diagnosis; but the lump didn't go away.

Roughly a month later, he visited his regular doctor and fellow Partner in Mission Dr. Liz Blachly. She examined him and determined the lump was not that large, but that they should keep an eye on it. But after school started in August, the lump got bigger again.

Holy Week has just recently ended, but we certainly continue to abide in a season of holiness in the life of Cross of Grace Lutheran Church.

The stories in this edition of GraceStories might seem random, however, they were selected to explore a few of the various ways we experience the Holy Spirit at work – through courageous battles with disease supported by community, through the vocation of each Partner in Mission, and through stepping into new and uncomfortable experiences at home and abroad.

Hopefully as you read these stories you will not only gain an appreciation for the Partners in Mission whom we have highlighted, but also you would be inspired to reflect on the ways in which the Holy Spirit is at work in your own life. Let's take care to appreciate the gifts in our lives including health, opportunities, and relationships.

Steve had an ultrasound and biopsy of his lymph node done on Dec. 14. "Liz called me the next day with the results," he said. "She said it was cancerous. I was certainly in denial."

After he met with Liz, Steve told his wife Gayle that he had cancer. They waited to tell their sons, Joel and Mitchell, until the following Sunday. Steve didn't want to burden the boys with the news because it was finals week. He didn't want to tell his parents he had cancer over the phone so he waited until they had Christmas with his family on Dec. 26.

Steve and Gayle told Pastor Mark about the diagnosis. Steve was scheduled for a biopsy of his tonsil on Dec. 22 at Community North's surgery center. Gayle immediately asked Christa Havel, a nurse at Community North, if she was working that day. Christa wasn't working, but she knew all the doctors and nurses scheduled for the procedure and helped put Gayle at ease.

Pastor Mark prayed with the Beebes before Steve's surgery and waited with Gayle until he was in recovery. The biopsy confirmed that the primary source of the cancer was his left tonsil and the doctors could proceed with a plan for treatment.

"I was anxious to begin the treatment and apprehensive about the process," Steve said. "I saw the whole treatment as something that had to be done. I didn't see it as a choice."

On New Year's Eve, Steve met with a radiation oncologist. It was his last appointment of consultations before his treatment started. His tonsil cancer was classified as "stage 4," but that is not as serious as, for example, pancreatic cancer might be at stage 4, he explained.

"The medical oncologist wanted to do the high octane chemo," he said. "He told me you want to hit it hard. You only want to do this once. They paint radiation on the areas that need it and avoid those that don't."

After his medical team determined their plan of attack, Steve sent an email to the New Palestine High School principals, telling them that he should be able to continue working for another three weeks before treatment began.

When Steve finally went on medical leave, all of his school and church responsibilities had to be divvied up among his family members, Partners in Mission, school officials and Booster members. "I told them they needed to find me a substitute teacher who can read music," he said. An arrangement was made for the sub to teach the kids during the day, and the Boosters and another teacher would take over after school.

Steve's students made T-shirts with the message "BeebeBrave" on them.

Gayle has directed the back-up band for the show choirs. And the Boosters' co-presidents have arranged transportation, communication and other logistics for the 80 New Pal students who are involved with the show choirs. "There was a lot of work to be done," he said.

Diamond Sensations is the women's show choir, while Crimson Heat is the mixed group. "Both groups had their last regular competition at Lawrence Central on March 12," Steve said. "Both groups had their best performance of the season and finished third in their division. Diamond Sensations went on to qualify for the Indiana State School Music Association (ISSMA) State Show Choir Finals on March 19."

Responsibilities also had to be delegated at church, where Jim Rowe stepped in to direct the COG choir, and Bernie Augenstein served as an accompanist. Receiving all of the assistance has been humbling, yet somewhat uncomfortable for Steve, who wasn't used to asking for help. "I try to accept help graciously," he said. "If you don't accept people's help, they can't do what Christ wants them to. People have to let people help them. It's been great to have a church family that's been so supportive."

After New Year's, the word began to spread about Steve's condition -- and even more aid started flooding in. Gift cards were given to Steve's family for meals, groceries and gasoline. He has received dozens of cards and letters, along with many home-cooked meals that were provided.

"There was an outpouring of thoughts and prayers," he said. "It was overwhelming."

Steve endured seven weeks of radiation, with treatments given Monday through Friday. He also had to undergo chemotherapy once a week, also for seven weeks. His last chemo treatment was Feb. 29. His final radiation treatment was March 4.

Due to the severity of the radiation, 90% of patients with tonsil cancer must get a feeding tube, but Steve fought that idea. "Mentally, I don't think I could do it," he said. "Unless I get to the point where I cannot swallow, I'll keep going without the feeding tube."

Through his ordeal, Steve has lost about 20 pounds. All food tastes bad to him. "It's difficult to swallow and I don't have any saliva anymore," he said. Steve is practically existing on soup and hot teas. "I'm getting sick of tea," he said. He drinks a variety of hot teas because it's too painful to drink anything cold.

"The whole thing hasn't been close to anything I expected," he said of being diagnosed with cancer. "I was prepared for lots of pain and bad things. I thought it would get bad and stay bad."

Although Steve downplays his disease, he admits that he has experienced pain, blistering and burning in his throat. However, he also said he has had more good days than bad.

After his fourth week of treatment, Steve shaved his beard and finally, his goatee, after his facial hair started falling out. He may have to eventually shave his mustache, too. "It's been 25 years since I had no facial hair," he said. "I'd look like Joel if I shaved it all off!" he said with a laugh.

Humor has been key in keeping his spirits up. "I've been glib about the whole thing," he said. "It's the only way I've been able to get through it. If you don't laugh, you cry."

People at Cross of Grace may know Steve from his beautiful baritone voice. He expected to lose his voice, but he has continued to sing. He has always had remarkable vocal stamina, he said.

"When we're at church, I continue to sing hymns and liturgy," he said. "I can't sing all the parts, but I've been trying. My range is starting to increase since finishing the radiation treatments." He tried to sing at the Ash Wednesday service, but it was difficult emotionally.

Meanwhile, others have helped keep things moving regarding the show choirs, as their performances continue to evolve. "Most people don't really know what I do," he said. "Music is organic. The show choir's competition shows are always evolving and constantly changing."

Steve said he has had some good experiences since he was diagnosed with cancer. "Everyone has been wonderful and positive," he said.

"Human nature is to take things for granted," he said. But when he discovered he had cancer, many people told him how important he is to them. "I've gotten a lot of texts and tweets from former students that I've influenced," he said.

Many people who are going through treatment for tonsil cancer are barely able to stand or talk, yet Steve keeps going strong. Steve attributes the fact that he has enough energy to keep going to the power of prayer. "You can feel yourself being enveloped in prayer," he said. "It's hard to describe."

Steve returned to his school duties on April 11.

INDYCAR™

SAFETY Dave

When you ask Dave Sevier about his years working on the Safety Team at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, he recalls one memorable crash in particular.

The driver was Roberto Guerrero and it happened at a night race in 1997 in Las Vegas. "Guerrero lost control coming out of Turn 2," said Dave, a Cross of Grace Partner in Mission. "He slid off course and his car turned end over end as it flipped." The car was almost completely obliterated but Guerrero miraculously climbed out of the bottom of the wreckage and stood up, visibly shaken. Although it had been a serious crash, Guerrero was somehow OK.

"There are so many things running through your mind when an incident happens," Dave said. "The first priority is driver safety. Are they hurt? Do they need extrication?"

From 1977 to 2012 Dave worked at the Speedway. For most of that time he drove the truck "Safety Team 1" stationed between the first and second turns. "I started out working as a firefighter/rescue team member and ended my career as the Safety Team Coordinator for the Halmatro Safety Team,"

During his years working on the safety team, Dave traveled to countries such as Japan, Canada, Australia and Brazil, as well as to several tracks in the United States, including Florida, New Hampshire, California, St. Louis, Texas, Kentucky and Las Vegas.

Dave and his wife Linda (Cross of Grace's Administrative Assistant for over a decade) were often treated to traveling on the private jet of the Indy Racing League. Occasionally, Linda worked in credentials. "It was a practical way to cover the cost of my travel," Linda said. "It was not unusual to have Hollywood types and sports figures at my table."

Dave's firefighting career began at the Sugar Creek Township Fire Department (SCTFD) in New Palestine in 1977. He served as a volunteer firefighter there for about 20 years. During his time with SCTFD, he was a firefighter, emergency medical technician, rescue captain, and assistant chief. Linda also served at the fire department as an EMT for about six years.

Also in 1977, Dave started working at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway as a night watchman in the garage area. The watchmen looked out for possible fires at the track, which could spread easily in the old wooden garages filled with race cars. Dave's shift was from 6 p.m. to midnight during the month of May when the Indy 500 was scheduled.

On the weekends, Dave worked on the fire trucks located on the track for IMS. Dave's day job was the Safety Director for Long Electric Company Inc. in Indianapolis.

Each IMS safety truck carries a driver, a paramedic and two firefighters. As the senior member of the team, Dave had the responsibility of driving the Safety 1 truck.

After each crash, the safety team speeds over to the site of the accident, arriving within seconds. The members use different codes to describe the condition of the driver over the radio for the doctors at the in-field hospital.

The IndyCars are remarkable in that the "tub" of the car, in which the driver sits, will often stay intact, while the rest of the car disintegrates during a crash. "Most of the injuries are minor -- broken bones and sprains," Dave said.

According to IndyCar rules, a driver must go to the in-field hospital if his car has any contact with a wall, barrier or another car. After the driver is guided into the ambulance, the safety team has to clean up any debris on the track and get ready to race again.

"There may or may not be time to talk about the incident when we get back into our ready position on the track," he said. "We need to be mentally ready when the green flag flies and the cars are at speed." In other words, they must get ready for the "next one."

After the race is over, the safety team still has a lot of work to do before its day is finished. The members have to clean equipment and pack up its safety trucks for transport to the next town. There is sometimes enough time to download videos from the crashes and other incidents. "We have video recorders in each of the safety trucks where we can view, critique and learn from each of our incidents," he said.

During a race, a safety team member must compartmentalize his thoughts. "You need to be ready for so many things during an event that you mostly react to an incident -- not think about what is next," he said. "It probably took me five or more years to trust my reactions and not second-guess my decisions. I can watch races now and see the 'new' safety team members as they struggle with the same thoughts."

There isn't a lot of downtime during a race weekend. "We didn't have a lot of discussion with the drivers," he said, adding that it was difficult to get to know them personally. But the drivers would occasionally "vent" to the safety team. "They had respect for what we did," he said.

Linda and Dave became good friends with another safety team member, Bob Nolen, and his wife Gloria. They lived in Hatfield, Pennsylvania. "Bob was my mentor and I paid attention to what he said and what he did, both on and off the track," Dave said. "He was the reason it only took five years for me to trust my reactions and not more. We have so many fond memories of Bob and Gloria and their family!"

Linda enjoyed going on the trips with Dave. "I loved the racing and I love travel," she said. "And it was fun watching Dave do his thing." She also once got to go on a "ride along" around IMS in a pace car.

IndyCar Ministry, which has its own website, travels with the series from race to race. "They are there to minister to the entire racing community all week long," Dave said. "They start the different racing meetings with prayer, and have a service on race morning. If our team was available, I attended this service often."

Another part of the safety team's duties involved making sure the racing surface was ready for the cars. "So, if it had rained the night before, we were out on the track and not available to attend the service," he said.

Dave decided to retire after their seven grandchildren, who are 7 years old and younger, started to arrive. "Linda's mother and my parents are aging," he said "It was time for me to slow down a bit."

He doesn't regret his decision to retire. However, he does miss the excitement and mental preparation it took to perform on a race weekend.

"Overall, my time with IMS and IndyCar was a great experience," Dave said. "We traveled the world, saw places and met people we wouldn't have had the opportunity to do otherwise."

The Seviers live in New Palestine and have been married for 41 years. They have three children: Cory (Cassie), who live in Brown County; Brad (Heather), who live in Jacksonville, Florida; and Kara (John Harrison), who live in New Palestine. Kara and John are also Partners in Mission at Cross of Grace. Dave and Linda officially joined COG in March 2014 but Linda said, "our hearts joined much earlier."

– Bettina Puckett

Dave Sevier consults with an IndyCar driver on the track.

During one of Linda's first years as an EMT, the fire department got a call on a Monday evening that there had been a car wreck northeast of New Palestine. "Two cars collided and a young mother died," Linda said. "It was difficult to compartmentalize this death and process the end of a life." Linda lost more than one night's sleep that week, thinking and praying about the young mother and her family.

"The following Sunday was Father's Day and we took another call of a woman in labor," she said. "By the time we arrived at the farmhouse, southwest of New Palestine, it was a reality that the baby would be born at home. We delivered the baby on the bathroom floor."

Linda had never witnessed the birth of a baby and, fortunately, it was an easy birth. The two incidents of death and then life reinforced to Linda the fragility of life and the good news of this "new life."

Another Havel Visits Haiti

Jackson Havel had the experience of a lifetime this February when he traveled with 16 other Christians to Haiti, one of the poorest countries in the world.

The Cross of Grace Partners in Mission who traveled to Haiti with Jackson included Pastor Mark; his grandmother, Sandy Havel; Dave Sevier, Amy Giesler, Denise Hercamp and Judy Jordan. They combined with others from St. Luke's United Methodist Church in Indianapolis.

Jackson said he enjoyed working -- and playing -- in Fondwa, Haiti. "The first day that we worked, we built a drainage trench at the orphanage. It was challenging, but wasn't super hard." They also helped build a water cistern at a local house. That job consisted of moving cinderblocks and buckets of dirt. The workers formed a line and an individual worker would transport a bucket of dirt 40 to 50 paces and then walk back and get the next bucket, Jackson said.

Jackson enjoyed playing with the orphans, and especially enjoyed one boy about his age who did not live at the orphanage. "His name is Jed," he said. "I gave him a foam football and we played catch a lot." The boys also played with a Frisbee, jump ropes and chalk that the group had brought to Fondwa. "They also played tag and hide and seek," Jackson said. "They love Jenga and puzzles."

Pastor Mark enjoyed watching Jackson's interaction with the young boy. "Here was a white, middle-class kid running around with other kids near a mountainside," Pastor Mark said. "You wouldn't think they had much in common." But the two boys had lots of fun. The older kids study English in school, so Jackson was able to communicate verbally with some of them. Anywhere from 35 to 50 children live at the orphanage at any given time. Parents will often leave their children at the orphanage for a time because they need help.

Jackson playing 'Accusacion' - a game he learned from his new Haitian friends.

Jackson enjoyed the food they were served by the nuns. "The goat was good," he said. "And the chicken was the best I've ever had. Everything was fresh, not processed." They ate a lot of rice and beans and had fresh fried eggs for breakfast every morning. Jackson said he also liked going to a couple of the local homes for coffee.

The group attended the dedication of the Carmelle Voltaire Women's Health Clinic, which has been constructed over a two-year period. Organizers began looking for land and purchased the property in the summer of 2014. The building was framed when Partners in Mission went to Fondwa last June.

There is no hospital in Fondwa, so the clinic provides much needed health care. "The facility is built and ready to go," Pastor Mark said. A doctor is being sought to run the clinic who will be instrumental in hiring other staff.

Most of the babies born in the community have been delivered by midwives, so convincing local women to use the new clinic is expected to be a challenge. "When a mother has seven kids at home that she's taking care of, it's kind of a hard sell to get her to go to the doctor," Pastor Mark said. "The goal is to get a mother to stay for 12 hours." He admitted there has been a learning curve in getting women to use the facility. Neighbors and older kids often take care of the younger ones when a mother is giving birth.

The new health center includes a pharmacy and a large room upstairs for teaching and seminars. There are rooms for visiting doctors and nurses to live. The goal is to have the Haitians eventually running the place.

Pastor Mark gave the opening prayer at the dedication ceremony for the new clinic. He also spoke proudly of the a plaque that reads "Cross of Grace Nursery" that hangs on the wall in the new nursery and symbolizes the link between our congregation and Fondwa.

One of the more challenging jobs that Pastor Mark and Jackson did was to distribute deworming pills to every kid at the school. The nuns who run the school try to accomplish this task once a year. The children don't like the pills because they do not taste good and can cause diarrhea. "We passed out a lot of fruit snacks and granola bars that day," Jackson said, explaining how the food helped get rid of the medicine's bad taste. The group held devotions each day of the 8-day trip, but weren't part of any actual worship services because they arrived on a Sunday and left on a Sunday.

This wasn't Jackson's first trip out of the country. He traveled to Germany, London and Paris with his family in 2014, but his experience in Haiti was strikingly different.

Jackson was not very excited about going on the trip at first, but his attitude changed after they settled in. "They don't know what to expect," Pastor Mark said of the first-time Haiti trippers.

By the second day, Jackson shared that he would like to come back to the country someday. "He never complained about the showers, food or having to be around grown-up people so much," Pastor Mark said of his 11-year-old son. "And he clicked with the kids right away."

Pastor Mark obtained a special cell phone plan so he could call Christa and Max back home in New Palestine. The group's last night was spent at a hotel in Port-au-Prince, and Jackson said it was like a 5-star hotel, compared to their other accommodations. Jackson didn't buy many souvenirs, but he did purchase a small wooden box with "Haiti" printed on it.

Since January, 2015, Cross of Grace has contributed $10,750 from its Building Fund to the Carmelle Voltaire Women's Health Clinic. Since 2011, Cross of Grace has contributed over $80,000 to the people of Fondwa, through its partnership with Family Health Ministries, and continues to share 5% of its Building Fund contributions toward those efforts. The congregation hopes to schedule another mission trip to Haiti in January-February of 2017.
